Death of Mrs. Aldrich.

Aldrich, died at her home in this place,

Friday evening, Dec. 6th, after months of constantly increasing disease which culminated in two weeks of terrible suffering when death came to her relief.

Mrs. Aldrich was the daughter of Melvin and Ida (Martin) Douglass, and was born February 23, 1882, at East Warren where she spent her childhood. She was married at her home in Williamstown,

June 24, 1899, and came immediately to reside at Lyndon where she had already spent a year or two. When her health

VERMONT NEWS.

The Great Dam at Chittenden.

In spite of the fact that at Chittenden one of the coldest places in Vermont there are now over two feet of snow and the weather is hovering about the zero point, the Chittenden Power Company has decided to proceed with the work of constructing their dam at that place, which is probably the largest ever built in New England. On account of the ex treme cold the Italians who have been employed by the company on the dam during the past six months have all quit work within the past few days, but the company will fill their places with 150 Russian laborers who are naturally fitted to work in just such a climate. The filling of the newly formed resorvoir in the spring will be an interesting process. It est mated that the reservoir will be a ake at least two miles in length. The watershed contains many square miles and it is not believed that it will require over a month to fill the immense reservoir. Little dependence is placed upon the stream, but the snow fall, rain-fall and springs in the entire water-shed are

An Historic Sabre.

Capt. Stephen F. Brown of Swanton has presented to the State Historical society a sabre that was captured by Capt. Brown July 3, 1863, from a confederate officer during Pickett's charge at the battle of Gettysburg, Capt. Brown was then first lieutenant of Company K Thirteenth Vermont regiment. At the time he captured the sabre the only weapon L'eut. Brown had was a camp hatchet. The belt has a buckle attached ocaring the coat of arms of the state of Georgia. Capt. Brown lost an arm at the battle of the wilderness. On a monument erected at Gettysburg in memory of the Thirteenth regiment Capt. Brown, cast in bronze, is standing on a granite pedestal, holding in his left hand a facsimile of this sabre.

An Old Postmaster Resigns.

Addison Whithed, who has been in the post office at Vernon 55 years, has resigned his office, with the intention of permanently retiring from business. Mr. Withed was appointed postmaster February 29, 1860, after fifteen years' service as clerk for his father, who held the office for Mrs. Maria Gordon died at her home for his father, who held the office for last week Monday night. She has been twenty-three years in its present location previous to the son's appointment. The Vernon office was established in 1820, when the old-time landlord and merchant to which callings the son succeeded, was commissioned. The whole amount of postage received for the first quarter of 1821 was $2.161/2. For many years the office was supplied once a week by a stage from Brattleboro to Worcester, the service finally being changed from weekly to daily stage trips until the coming of the railroad in 1848. Addison Withed has been a well-known resident of Vernon all these years, and represented his town in the legislature in 1872 and 1874. He has also been selectman and lister all the time continuing his mercantile and post office work.

Montpelier Wants a New Railroad. Montpelier and Barre citizens are in terested in plans for building a railroad from Rutland to Newport and held a meeting last week to informally discuss the matter. The opinion expressed at the meeting was that the construction of a railroad from Rutland to Newport should be favored. It was argued that this road would pass through Montpelier and would make a through trunk ine between New York and Quebec, connecting at Rutland with the Rutland railroad and at Newport with the Canadian Pacific. The feeling is that all towns on the proposed route would assist liberally in building the railroad and hints are freely made outside the meeting that an approachment ought to be made to the Rutland railroad to interest itself
